

Deloitte's Unified Campus Experience powered by Workday

8 key issues impacting Australia's higher education institutions

The coronavirus pandemic has upended business as usual for universities, institutes of technical and further education and registered training organisations. Almost overnight, not only have campuses closed and shifted to remote learning, major capital programs and plans have been cancelled or put on hold due to financial constraints. To mitigate these challenges and capitalize on the opportunities this changing landscape presents – today's higher education must be able to rely on their core information systems. These systems must help them drive efficient day-to-day operations, while generating data that provides leaders with insights that can help shape longer-term, strategic decisions.

We call this approach, "creating the unified campus experience", where we examine eight key issues that are impacting Australia's higher education institutions across their campuses and how the adoption of Workday can help organisations in the effort of creating a unified campus experience.
