

Deloitte Bribery and Corruption Survey 2015 Australia & New Zealand Separate the wheat from the chaff

Domestic corruption

Are we as clean as we think?

Thought: Are Australia and New Zealand deserving of their respective reputations? Almost one in four organisations having an incident is a significant level of corruption. Can your organisation afford to ignore this risk?

Foreign bribery laws

Abiding or abetting?

Thought: While there are encouraging signs pointing to improvement in a comprehensive understanding from the 2012 results, Australian and New Zealand organisations still have a way to go. It's a fundamental governance imperative that executives and board members understand that the legislation exists, their organisation's obligations under it, and what their organisation is doing to manage those obligations.

Offshore exposure

Who's at risk?

2015 Top industries to report offshore incidents

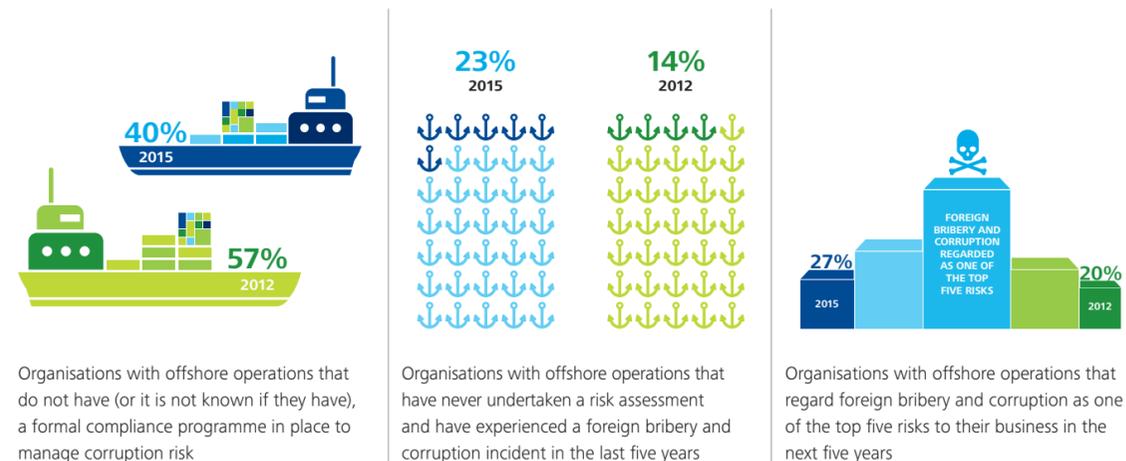

2012 Top industries to report offshore incidents

Question: How clear is the line of sight in respect of offshore operations, and what is the understanding and level of management of the risk without a risk assessment? Are too many organisations relying on the assumption that the span of control will not be diluted, and related third parties will do the right thing?

Offshore risks

Who's accountable?

Question: Despite a 17 percentage point fall from the 2012 results, the number of organisations that do not have (or it is not known if they have) a formal bribery and corruption compliance programme remains a concern. How do these organisations determine whether or not they are at risk, and whether a corruption event has occurred, is occurring, or is likely to occur?
