

When a global oil and gas producer was assessing the feasibility of a new liquefied natural gas (LNG) project

We helped it evaluate the project to support making its final investment decision

The Challenge

The global oil and gas producer was assessing the feasibility of an LNG project. It needed to assure itself and joint venture partners that the organisation was in a position to support a final investment decision from a capability, process and technology perspective.

How we helped?

Deloitte conducted an assessment of the readiness of the organisation to support the final investment decision. Our focus was on organisational structure, business models and key functional areas, including well development, site management, logistics, contracting and procurement, technology, data management, finance, public affairs, government relations and human resources.

In each domain, we used benchmarking, leading practice reviews, and general readiness assessments to determine key gaps and prioritised recommendations. Multiple workshops with executive management allowed Deloitte to facilitate agreement of priority areas, who held responsibility for them and the establishment of a Project Management Office specifically focussed on readiness activities.

Value delivered

Following the Deloitte review and the co-ordinated uptake of the list of recommendations, the final investment decision was achieved on schedule with the support of all joint venture participants.
