COVID-19: Social security tolerances for cross-border workers further extended

The persistent and ongoing COVID-19 pandemic continues to have widespread and potentially long-term consequences for working patterns. In response, the EU Administrative Commission for the Coordination of Social Security Systems (comprising representatives from social security authorities of all European Economic Area member states and Switzerland) has decided to extend the “no-impact” measures at European Union level in view of determining the applicable social security legislation through 30 June 2022.

This allows employers and employees better to address the possible social security effects created by the pandemic, while waiting for more stable times to resume. In practical terms, it means that changes in work patterns resulting from the COVID-19 restriction measures, such as increased work time spent in the country of residence where this is not the usual country of employment, do not affect the applicable social security legislation.
