Project Management

Have you planned a project and found out that you are facing a lack of resources and innovative technology? Are you introducing or optimising corporate processes and cannot decide what approach is the best to apply?

In order to achieve set project goals, innovative processes and methods should be applied, while using comprehensive knowledge, skills and experience with a wide range of successful products across all industries.

With respect to organisation and project specifics, we will select and follow the most appropriate methodology and approach.

We will offer you a comprehensive process, ranging from initiation to successful project completion:

1. Project definition

First and the most important task to complete before running any project is to define its scope - e. g. objective, budget, timeline and measures which will help to evaluate the project once it is completed.

2. Planning

When the project goal is defined, it is necessary to elaborate on individual steps. For such steps, a list of sub-tasks is prepared. This detailed list further contains the timeline and financial framework. Emphasis is placed on comprehensibility whereby feasibility in the given case is also critically assessed.

3. Realisation, integration

The follow-up phase already involves the implementation as such, i.e. performing the defined steps and tasks. It is of major significance to maintain regular communication with all stakeholders, record individual procedures and simultaneously monitor the timeline and project budget management.

4. Monitoring, problem resolution

Monitoring is another crucial step towards successful implementation. An emphasis is placed on meeting deadlines and monitoring all potential departures from the original plan.

5. Termination

In the final phase, the project is terminated and the project implementation is assessed. The output usually includes a final report containing, inter alia, the lesson learned from the project.
