Private investor interest in general has been constrained by issues of project preparation quality, regulatory clarity and legal certainty. Major projects continue to suffer long delays due to budget process issues, while improvements to institutional capacity, decision-making processes and safeguards against corruption are required to facilitate project implementation and asset operation and maintenance at both the national and the sub-national levels.

In recognition of key major constraints of accelerating infrastructure projects, the Indonesian government is undertaking fiscal reforms to improve project attractiveness to private sector investors (Viability Gap Fund; Availability Payments and a land revolving fund); and the establishment of the PPP Unit to the Ministry of Finance, formulated as the agency that will determine more market friendly funding schemes as well as regulatory reforms (such as ratification of revised regulations related to PPPs to include social infrastructure, and with respect to Performance - Based Annuity Schemes, direct lending, land acquisition, etc.).

City Governments are starting to innovate around the procurement of infrastructure in their respective cities. Melbourne is the world's most liveable city for the sixth year running according the Economist's Global Liveability survey. Diversity is one of the city's biggest strengths. With more than a quarter of Melbourne's population born overseas, it's unsurprising that the city has a wide variety of cultures and cuisines. In the state of Victoria alone, more than 260 languages and dialects are spoken, with people coming from over 200 different countries.

Melbourne also has smart city ambitions, and has already introduced projects which use data and digital technologies to meet the changing needs of its residents. This includes creating CityLab, a space where innovative ideas and services can be tested and introduced into communities. The lab takes a human-centered design approach and involves working with the users of new services from an early stage.

The investment grade, will theoretically give Indonesia access to a wider pool of investors. The economy can access cheaper borrowing costs. As Indonesian Minister of Finance said the government would now focus on keeping the state budget credible and effective, Indonesia will try to reach its development goals without having to resort to an unsustainable budget. Will the upgrade could help boost investment and allow Indonesia to reach economic growth of 5.4 - 6.1 percent in 2018?
