

Managing the risks and opportunities of a carbon-constrained world Reap the rewards of a change in behaviour

The new challenges of climate change

In contrast to the financial crisis and the current recession, the effects of climate change on the economy as a whole will undoubtedly continue to be felt for quite some time. Multi-dimensional, ever-changing and complex, climate change will increasingly affect the rules of the business world. There will be winners and losers.

What risks will climate change and the increasing scarcity of fossil energy represent for companies? What are they doing to mitigate and manage these risks?

The effectiveness with which companies handle risks and the possibilities linked to climate change will allow them to stand out from the competition.

Have you ever wondered?

- What are the risks and opportunities linked to carbon management that could influence our operations and supply chain?
- Could difficulties to provide information on the carbon content of our products harm our competitiveness?
- How can we ensure that our carbon footprint is correctly calculated?
- Should we fear major changes in our clients' environmental requirements?
