

Global Summary

2020 Deloitte Millennial Survey

Our methodology:

In late 2019, for its ninth annual Millennial Survey, Deloitte Global surveyed 18.4k millennial and Gen Z respondents across 43 countries, including 302 respondents from New Zealand, to understand their views on a variety of topics—from their actions to make a positive impact in the world; to what they are looking for in jobs and employers; to the role of business in society; to the issues of mental health and stress; and more.

In early 2020, as the COVID-19 pandemic continued to unfold around the world, Deloitte fielded an additional survey of 9,100 respondents across 13 countries to supplement the original survey findings with insights about:

- How millennials and Gen Zs are responding to the pandemic;
- How it is impacting them, their jobs/workplaces, and their views on businesses and governments; and
- The long-term implications the pandemic may have.

Key findings:

The unfolding of the COVID-19 pandemic and the preventive measures undertaken to slow its spread have impacted the attitudes of millennials and Gen Zs. The pulse survey conducted in Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, South Korea, Spain, the UK and the US during the pandemic uncovered the following global insights:

Mental health: Before the pandemic, close to half of the respondents said they were stressed all or most of the time. But anxiety levels fell eight points for both generations in the peak-pandemic pulse survey, indicating a potential silver lining to the disruption caused by the pandemic.

Environment: Prior to the pandemic, half of respondents said they believed it was too late to repair the damage caused by climate change. Yet, this figure dropped in the pulse survey, suggesting the environmental improvements resulting from reduced human activity during the pandemic has given hope there is still time to take action.

Finances: Many are financially prudent and literate, but three-fourths often worry about their financial situations either in the short or long term.

Work and loyalty: Before the pandemic, more millennials said they'd like to stay with their employers for at least five years than would prefer to leave within two, signaling employers may be better addressing their needs. It remains to be seen how loyalty will be affected by the pandemic.

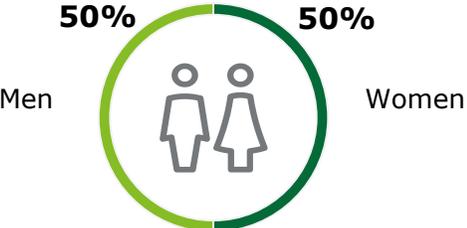

View of institutions: A majority of respondents gave businesses and governments high marks for their pandemic responses. Actions taken during the crisis, however, did not translate into overall better opinions of these institutions or their leaders.

We can understand the shifts in Millennial and Gen Z mindset during COVID-19 from a global perspective through the lens of these 13 countries, and how their attitudes evolved throughout the crisis.
