

Corporate Taxpayers Group

What is the Corporate Taxpayers Group?

The Corporate Taxpayers Group is an organisation of major New Zealand businesses that work with key Government Officials to achieve positive change in tax policy in New Zealand.

The Group is one of most active tax special interest groups in New Zealand, making regular submissions on tax policy documents, tax legislation and Inland Revenue interpretations and operational matters.

New Zealand has an effective and robust tax system and the Group believes that some of this success is attributable to the strong working relationship between the private sector and Officials. In working with Officials the Group hopes to foster a co-operative and mutually beneficial relationship between large taxpayers and Inland Revenue.

Principles for a good tax system

Underpinning the Group's submissions and engagement with Officials on tax issues are four main principles that the Group believes a good tax system should be built around. These principles are:

- High certainty and low business risk
- Low compliance costs
- Positive contribution
- International competitiveness with our major trading partners and competitors, especially Australia

The Group believes that following these four principles will ensure that the tax system fosters and encourages New Zealand's business environment and attracts foreign investment, to the benefit of the wider community.

Key initiatives

In addition to devoting resources to responding to issues being progressed by Inland Revenue, the Group is forward-looking and proactively raises policy and operational issues that benefit the New Zealand tax system to ensure it is working effectively and efficiently.

The focus of the Group is on achieving the right corporate tax policy settings for New Zealand's tax system, not to push individual or industry specific agendas, and discussions with Officials and the Group's submissions proceed on this basis.
