Deloitte Pakistan is planning to bid on Training Needs Assessment of Unemployed Youth in Sindh and Future Career Needs for Training Program project by Benazir Bhutto Shaheed Human Resource Research & Development Board. As part of this bid activity, Deloitte is looking for experienced professionals to work with the organization on a short-term contract. The project consists of a Training Needs Assessment of young people in Sindh to determine their employability in Sindh in the future. It assesses both potential employers and their needs for specific skills as well as the current skillset of young people in Sindh. Using these analyses, it will provide recommendations on what skills would increase the employability of young people in Sindh.

The main terms of reference of the project are:

- Review of current training programs, while focusing on specific trade, rather than the entire sector to determine scope of their employability
- Devise a plan to assess and report challenges/capacity gaps with respect to profile of trainees and training approach / methodology / duration and content for each level of trainee;
- Design survey questionnaires, interview schedules, focus group topics and/or supplementary materials and capacity building activities for staff concerned.
- Identify employable trades which are not currently in training (s) and expected employment opportunities on regional, national and international levels.
- Identify potential employers, trade wise.
