Possible abolition of pre-trial judicial review of cadastral values of property

It is reported that amendments to the procedure for reconsidering cadastral values are under consideration. In particular, plans call for the question of whether it is possible to abolish the compulsory pre-trial judicial review of cadastral values to be studied. Please note that in accordance with the effective legislation, before appealing to a court, cadastral values must be disputed at commissions under the control of the Federal Service for State Registration, the Casdastre and Cartography.
