

Navigating the CIO journey

The forward-thinking CIO will often fulfill current business expectations, look ahead to future business priorities, and then chart their course to the pattern that best fits what the business will require next—which gives CIOs six potential journeys to navigate:

A shift to trusted operator may be needed when the organisation:

-  Is facing delivery challenges for a large, global implementation coupled with an IT budget cut
-  Has a security breach or IT delivery challenges as part of a merger

A shift to change instigator may be needed when the organisation:

-  Requires a complex, customer-facing, technology-enabled transformation
-  Needs a major shakeup to meet digital mandates

A shift to business co-creator may be needed when the organisation:

-  Is making new acquisitions or facing rapid growth into new markets where alignment is needed between business and IT
-  Needs to align business and IT strategy post a large transformational system implementation
