ICEbreakers: Unlocking Germany

Hot topics

- Withholding tax on interest: Germany generally does not levy withholding tax on interest payments (with limited exceptions).
- Debt-pushdown considerations: Debt push-downs may be possible within the limits of the interest deduction limitation rule.
- Consequences of indirect share transfer: An indirect share transfer in a German entity could affect German tax attributes and trigger real estate transfer tax (RETT).
- Trade tax: The trade tax rate typically is around 15%, but can be as low as 7%.
- Increased compliance burden: There are increased requirements to qualify for a reduced or zero withholding tax rate on dividends and royalties under Germany's tax treaties. Strict anti-treaty shopping rules may affect the ability of a taxpayer to qualify for the beneficial rates.
- Participation exemption for dividends: Hybrid instruments that provide for a tax deduction at the level of the payer do not qualify for the 95% participation exemption for dividends.

Other developments

- The Constitutional Court has held that the change-in-ownership rules with regard to ownership changes between 25% and 50% infringe the German constitution and must be amended with retroactive effect for the period 2008 to 2015. The constitutionality of ownership changes greater than 50% currently is pending before the court.
- Federal elections are scheduled for September 20, 2017. Depending on the outcome and the formation of a new government, the tax policy for the next four years could change, but it seems unlikely that a major tax reform will be introduced.
- A joint task force between the government and the federal states is discussing proposals to implement the results of the BEPS project and the EU ATAD directive I and II. Legislative action (with potential retroactive effect), including a long-awaited anti-hybrid rule, is expected in late 2017/early 2018.
- Germany is one of the countries that signed the OECD multilateral instrument on June 7, 2017. As a result of the MLI, the application of some of Germany's tax treaties will change in the future.
- Based on a policy change at the level of the federal tax authorities, the 0% and 5% dividend withholding tax rates under the Germany-US tax treaty may not be available where a limited liability company qualifies as a flow-through entity/partnership for US tax purposes or an S corporation in the corporate chain above a German corporation. This policy change should apply for dividends paid after June 30, 2013.
- Filing XBRL-based tax financials is mandatory; a detailed taxonomy is required, which is sector-specific in some cases.

Legislative updates

- The 2016 Act Concerning the Improvement of Corporate Loss Utilization introduced an additional opportunity for taxpayers to obtain relief from the general change-in-ownership rules, by introducing a new net operating loss carryforward category for "business continuation losses." The new rule applies retroactively as from January 1, 2016.
- A law introduced in July 2017 limits the deductibility of certain related party royalty payments for payments made after December 31, 2017. The law applies to royalty payments that result in the "low taxation" of the royalty income at the level of the recipient due to the application of a favorable tax regime/intellectual property regime in situations where the relevant regime is not based on the "nexus approach" described in action 5 of the OECD BEPS project. The law contains several new technical terms and could be broadly applied by the German tax authorities.
