Acknowledgements

The What's Next for Community Philanthropy initiative was co-created in collaboration with hundreds of community philanthropy practitioners and external experts around the globe. It is the product of conversations, readings, and interactions too numerous to name.

We are immensely grateful to our many partners and influences, both inside and outside of our organization, and want attempt to do our best to highlight them here.

First and foremost, we are indebted to our advisory committee members in both the United States and Canada for their tireless leadership, insight, advocacy, and patience throughout the project. Without their contributions, the initiative simply would not have happened.

Several other individuals — Deborah Ellwood of CFLeads, Becca Graves of CF Insights, Jenny Hodgson of the Global Fund for Community Foundations, Ian Bird of Community Foundations of Canada, Dick Ober of the New Hampshire Charitable Trust, and Vikki Spruill of the Council on Foundations — also deserve special thanks for generously going far above and beyond the call of duty in helping support, shape, and advance the What's Next initiative and its ideas.

And we want to express our sincere appreciation to Audrey Haberman, Jan Jaffe, Mark Sedway, Allison Eltrich, and Jeff Clarke of The Giving Practice and Philanthropy Northwest for their collaboration, persistence, and creative thinking in working with us to conduct an important extension of the What's Next project that convened an amazing set of community philanthropy leaders from their region to test out and refine several of the initiative's concepts and tools.

In addition, we would like to extend our deepest thanks to a number of team members who have helped make the project a reality. To start, we relied heavily on the wisdom of Katherine Fulton and Lucy Bernholz, two co-authors of On the Brink of New Promise: The Future of U.S. Community Foundations, our first exploration of community foundations back in 2005. Both helped us view community foundations as part of a much larger philanthropic landscape, which became a key theme throughout our work. And we want to give special thanks to Megan Schumann, Heather Imboden, Caroline Bas, Avon Swofford, Dana O'Donovan, and Tony Siesfeld, who helped us develop and refine our thinking over the course of the project and were instrumental to moving the initiative forward.

Other parts of Deloitte Consulting also significantly influenced our thinking on the project. The innovation strategy group Dublin created the original work around “orthodoxies,” and we want to thank Larry Keeley, Erik Kiaer, and Banshi Nagji for helping us translate the orthodoxies work and other commercial innovation concepts to the social sector. Another Deloitte unit, the Center for the Edge, created other key concepts that were integrated into the project, including elements of our ideation and prototyping workshops, the “scaling edges” framework, the idea to create a colorful flipbook, and the clever “Shift Happens” title of one of our documents. In particular we would like to thank John Hagel, John Seely Brown, Duleesha Kulasooriya, and Maggie Wooll. Additionally, Chris Ertel from Deloitte Greenhouse provided valuable input. And Deloitte’s Strategy and Operations Eminence and Marketing team, led by Eamonn Kelly, provided invaluable support and guidance in helping to create multi-media websites, printed materials, and even card games related to the project.

We would also like to thank a number of other team members who helped in various ways with the research, brainstorming, and publication of this work: Elan Siedband, Hannah Yang, Andrei Santalo, Amrit Bhinder, Lisa Newman-Wise, Stuart Burden, and Noah Flower. And we would like to show our appreciation for the design team who helped turn our ideas into beautiful documents: Beth Adams, Daniel Wahlig, Lynn Carruthers, Christine Oh, and our web designers at Kluge Interactive.

We do not have the names of everyone who helped to co-create the ideas of this initiative. But the people noted below represent what we believe is a nearly complete list of those who provided us with critical feedback and input through interviews, review of draft materials, and participation in pilot workshops. We apologize in advance for anyone we have missed.
