Too often, our work culture encourages women to get their foot in the door, only to leave them without support once they step in.

Surviving as a leader is the floor, not the ceiling. What really matters is the vision you set, the teams you build, and the impact you make on your colleagues, your organization, and the world. Excelling as a woman leader means feeling empowered to be your authentic self, leaving behind norms set by men for men, sexist stereotypes, and the expectation of perfection.

Arrive and Thrive offers women the resources, advice, and support they need to pave a smoother path to success. Executive Chair of Deloitte’s US board, Janet Foutty, teams up with two renowned women leaders—Susan MacKenty Brady and Dr. Lynn Perry Wooten—to show you how to uncover new levels of strength, resilience, and courage to lead in an increasingly complex environment. Packed with first-hand contributions from both men and women leaders of some of today’s biggest and most successful organizations, Arrive and Thrive offers seven actionable practices that help women leaders thrive when they arrive.

Susan MacKenty Brady is the Deloitte Ellen Gabriel Chair for Women and Leadership and CEO of Simmons University Institute for Inclusive Leadership. A highly sought-after author and expert on self-aware leadership, Susan has keynoted or consulted at over 500 organizations worldwide.

Janet Foutty is the Executive Chair of the Board of Deloitte US. She previously was the chair and CEO of Deloitte Consulting LLP. Janet is committed to purposeful leadership and recognizes that business can and should make a broader societal impact that matters.

Dr. Lynn Perry Wooten is President of Simmons University. Her academic research focuses on everyday leadership, crisis management, and workforce diversity. She also maintains a robust clinical practice devoted to leadership development.
