Reaching a consensus on management review controls
Requirements from the PCAOB are causing auditors to require a level of precision and specificity for management review controls (MRCs) beyond prior years. Establishing a constructive dialogue between companies, auditors, and regulators to define “how much is enough” with respect to MRCs will help to address the lack of clarity in what exactly is sufficient and how precise they need to be.

COSO ERM update will seek to elevate risk discussions
The refresh of COSO’s ERM framework is expected to be published as a draft for exposure and public comment in the spring, according to COSO Chairman Robert Hirth. This blog post from Compliance Week outlines that the update is expected to suggest that companies should integrate ERM into their strategy-setting process and propose that entities make it standard practice to incorporate risk considerations into the decision-making process.
