2016 Survey of US Health Care Consumers
A look at exchange consumers
2016 Survey of US Health Care Consumers

The public health insurance exchanges have been in operation for nearly three years now. Deloitte’s 2015 Survey of US Health Care Consumers found that these exchanges may be opening the door for a new generation of engaged health care consumers. To that end, we sought to understand their satisfaction with coverage, confidence in handling future health care costs, use of online services, knowledge of costs, and how they shop for coverage.

Exchange consumers say they are satisfied with their coverage at the same rate as people with employer coverage.

More than half (53%) of exchange consumers are satisfied with their health plan overall.

Their satisfaction levels are equivalent to those with employer insurance (54%).

However, their satisfaction rate is lower than that of people with Medicare (74%) and Medicaid (71%).

More exchange consumers feel prepared to handle future costs and able to access affordable care than last year.

7 in 10 exchange consumers say they had no financial difficulty paying for out-of-pocket costs in the last year.

While still low in an absolute sense, consumers’ confidence in affordability appears to have increased somewhat.

In 2016, one-in-three exchange consumers (34%) feel prepared to handle future health care costs compared with 16% in 2015.

Nearly half of exchange consumers (45%) say they feel confident about being able to get affordable care, and confidence appears to have increased over last year (24% in 2015).

More than twice as many exchange consumers report using online information sources to shop for a policy than the average consumer, including those with employer coverage.

67% of exchange consumers went online to look for information to help them choose a policy vs. only 31% of the overall sample and 30% with employer coverage.

66% of exchange consumers say that the online site they used the most to enroll in coverage had tools to compare out-of-pocket costs and they used them (59% for window shopping tools).

58% of people with employer coverage who went online to choose a policy used tools to compare out-of-pocket costs and 50% used window shopping tools.

Exchange consumers shop around for coverage and evaluate the total costs before making decisions, and they continue to be willing to accept network tradeoffs for lower payments.

Only 10% of exchange consumers look solely at the premium to select their coverage.

- 5% of exchange consumers report that they've never shopped for health insurance or don't remember shopping for coverage vs. 31% of all consumers and 30% of people with employer coverage.

- 38% of exchange consumers say they start with companies they know and then look at premium, deductibles, copays, coinsurance, and benefits covered vs. 23% of all consumers and 25% of people with employer coverage.

- 23% of exchange consumers say they look for the best benefit package based on premium, deductibles, copays, coinsurance, and benefits covered and do not pay much attention to the company offering them vs. 18% of all consumers and 17% of people with employer coverage.

- 27% say they would accept a smaller network of hospitals (18% last year) compared with 20% of all consumers this year.

- 26% say they would accept a network that does not include their current primary care provider (16% last year) compared with 20% of all consumers this year.

- 26% say they would accept a smaller network of doctors (18% last year) compared with 19% of all consumers this year.

Methodology

Since 2008, the Deloitte Center for Health Solutions has annually polled a nationally representative sample of US adults about their experiences and attitudes related to their health, health insurance, and health care and their views about the health care system. The general aim of the survey is to track changes in consumer engagement over time and investigate key questions of interest to the health plan, provider, life sciences, and government sectors. The 2016 survey included 3,751 adults (18 years and older). The national sample is representative of the US Census with respect to age, gender, race/ethnicity, income, geography, insurance status, and insurance source. A subsample of 804 respondents reported getting coverage through HealthCare.gov or a state health insurance marketplace, exchange, or connector (“exchange”). Respondents in the exchange subsample varied with respect to demographic characteristics, prior insurance status, and type of exchange used.
