Resilience: Connecting and innovating

Host:

Mike Kearney, Deloitte Risk & Financial Advisory Partner and CMO, Deloitte & Touche LLP

Guest:

Bill Marquard, Managing Director, Monitor Deloitte, Deloitte Consulting LLP

Mike Kearney: Welcome to Resilient. My name is Mike Kearney, the Deloitte Risk & Financial Advisory CMO. A little over five years ago, I started this podcast with a single mission: to talk to leaders about how they encountered and emerged even stronger from risk, crisis, and disruption. And looking back, I couldn't have imagined where we would end up. I am so grateful for the time that all of our guests have given to us.

If you're listening for the first time, check out past episodes. There is gold in hearing from other leaders about their experiences, insight, and advice.

Today is no different. I'm joined by a strategist who is exploring a topic we often talk about—resilience. But what's different, you might ask?

In this episode of Resilient, Bill Marquard, managing director, Monitor Deloitte, talks about new insights into how resilient leaders connect disparate dots, marrying art, science, and systems thinking to cultivate greater resilience for their organizations and even their teams.

Bill Marquard: This use of metaphors, this idea of looking outside of the core purview of business, is a way that we, as leaders, can make the unknown known. Every situation that we face, we haven't necessarily been there before, but if there's an analog, if there's something that we can refer to that has common characteristics, we can often learn very effectively from that. And also what it does is enables us in our minds to basically frame a situation that's too large in a way that's actually manageable and that we can lead and manage through it.
