Adoption of managed float exchange rate system<sup>1</sup>

On 15 June 2016, the Governor of the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) issued the revised guidelines for the adoption of a flexible exchange rate regime at the inter-bank market while maintaining a window for a fixed exchange rate regime for certain critical transactions. The newly introduced exchange rate regime effectively removes the peg previously placed by the CBN and will allow for fluctuations in the exchange rate with occasional interventions by the CBN. The exchange rate regime is effective from 20 June 2016.

Spotlight on Nigeria: Government tightens regulatory reins

Africa from the inside:
Spotlight on Nigeria

29 October 2015

Government tightens regulatory reins

The global overvaluing of petroleum products and the slowdown of the global economy has caught many oil-producing countries but also some investors by surprise. As Africa's largest oil producer, Nigeria's growth outlook and fiscal position have been impacted negatively by 'half-price' oil. In its most recent forecast for Nigeria, the IMF cut the country's 2015 GDP growth rate from 4.5% to 4%, in contrast to actual growth of 6.3% in 2014.

Beyond the slower growth outlook, investors should also take note of a likely stricter regulatory compliance environment. Two of South Africa's largest and most prominent investors in Nigeria – MTN and Standard Bank – felt the heat of tighter enforcement of regulations and government scrutiny this week.

MTN Nigeria – the largest subsidiary of the MTN Group – was presented with a N1.46 billion fine by the Nigerian Communications Commission (NCC) – the communications industry regulator – related to the timing of the disconnection of 5.5m subscribers in Nigeria. The fine resulted in a more than 12% drop in the parent company's share price on the day of the announcement. In the banking sector, Stanbic Nigeria is currently facing sanctions in Nigeria due to alleged irregularities related to its financial statements. As part of the sanctions, the Financial Reporting Council (FRC) suspended the chairman and three directors of Stanbic HFC Holdings in Nigeria.

In light of domestic revenue collection pressures it is speculated that regulators here collect targets and are using enforcement and penalties as tools to meet these. This could arguably be seen as an easier sell to the electorate than increasing taxes, or cutting civil servant salaries. However, the heavy-handed approach towards foreign companies, as well as local companies including FirstBank and UBA – which were fined N1.5bn and N2.5bn respectively for allegedly concealing Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation's (NNPC) funds, is leaving Nigeria's image as an investment destination and possibly increasing policy uncertainties and regulatory risks for current and prospective investors in an already difficult operating environment.

Key takeaways

Strict compliance with local regulators is likely to become a major factor of doing business in Nigeria and should be matched by greater investments into capacity building in the area by companies. To mitigate the risk of being perceived as a less-friendly investment destination, the development and use of strategic investment arbitration processes might help to strike a balance between regulators and the market going forward.
